

ARTISTS AND THEIR WORK - A WORK IN PROGRESS

Compiled by Shab Levy

This latest version, representing 281 artists and 592 works of art, replaces all prior versions of this project. The list is arranged chronologically by the year of the birth of the artist. Each page is dedicated to one work of art. The list is based primarily on personal preference and non-academic research of some of the most popular works in the history of art. Most examples show work done since the 19th century, with few dating from earlier periods. The research was done using personal art books, catalogs and the internet. However, there is no systematic or otherwise justified reason as to the included selections other than personal preference. I have concentrated only on western art, because this is what I am familiar with, although I have no doubt that eastern art and especially the influence of such on western civilization has affected significantly some of these works. According to art historians, modern art started around the 1860s and lasted until the 1970s, and denotes the style and philosophy of the art produced during that era. The term is usually associated with art in which the traditions of the past have been set aside and replaced with a spirit of experimentation. After the 1970s modern art is often called Contemporary or Postmodern. You might notice that only a few photographers and architects are included in this compilation of images. In later versions this scarcity will be rectified.

Each work of art has a link to Wikipedia, the Free Encyclopedia on the Internet, about the artist of the work on view. (Click the name of the artist to link to Wikipedia.)

I have rationalized my liberal use of images because:

- 1. The purpose of this list of images and descriptions is not for commercial use.
- 2. This is a historically significant visual work that could not be conveyed in words.
- 3. Inclusion of the images is for information, education and analysis only.
- 4. The inclusion of low resolution pictures here adds significantly to this list because these images depict the actual work of art and because writing about visual art without showing visuals, is not very useful.
- 5. The images are low resolution copies of facsimiles of the original works and would be unlikely to impact sales of the originals or of commercial prints based on the originals.

An alphabetical list of all represented artists starts on page 597

I hope that you will enjoy perusing the images. I would be grateful if you let me know if in your opinion I have made some major errors, or missed an important work of art. In short, I would like to hear from you. Email me at: shablevy@comcast.net

Thank you,

PHOTOREALISM

The following dozen or so pages present photorealistic works of art. Photorealism is the genre of painting based on using the camera and photographs to record an image and from this information creating a painting that appears photographic. The term is primarily applied to paintings from the United States art movement that began in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

ILLUSTRATION

The following several pages show work done by a few well known illustrators and/or authors: Norman Rockwell, Bradshas Crandel, Dr. Zeuss

Why the separation from the general list?

The usual answer is this: All illustrators are artists but not all artists are illustrators. Illustration, when contrasted to fine painting is done for a specific purpose, namely to illustrate words or ideas and is usually accompanied by words, in books, magazines, posters and such. Illustrators are usually hired by someone to illustrate a story or a thought, whereas artists usually do art for art sake. Many fine artists have done fine paintings on commission as well, so at certain point there is a fine line which can be drawn either way. For example, Michelangelo was paid for painting the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel in Rome, but we know him as a great artist and not an illustrator. In any event, I separated these two categories for the sake of purists amongst you.
